

The country of Turkey, then known as Anatolia, began producing wine six thousand years ago. There are exhibits of this early wine industry dating back to 4,000 B.C. The ancient word for wine by this pre-Hittite civilization was actually "Vino". Phrygians from Anatolia introduced wine to the Greeks, then Turkish wine was being exported as far abroad as France and Italy.

Today, there are 1,250 different grape varieties grown in Turkey therefore Turkish wines fly under the radar of most people and most wine lovers. Wine makers in Turkey continue to discover new indigenous varieties and focus on reviving those that are nearly extinct. They are still learning about the possibilities of what these grapes can do. We are very happy to introduce you our wine menu which has effected from this history and variety of our grapes.
